EXPERIENCE

Leila Sadeghi has comprehensive litigation and transactional experience. Prior to joining Weil & Drage, APC (“W&D”), Leila held a long-term position as General Counsel for an international engineering software and services company where she oversaw and/or handled all legal matters for the company. She has extensive experience with technology and software licensing and protection issues, as well as other intellectual property related matters. The company was engaged in providing engineering services in relation to, among other things, the power systems design and operation of various projects including data and distribution centers, as well as large industrial operations throughout the world. In her role, Leila was involved in the creation, negotiation, and finalization of contracts and relationships between the involved parties.

Leila’s current practice includes both transactional and litigation work including contract creation and negotiation, intellectual property protection, employment issues, as well as litigating professional liability, personal injury, product liability, malpractice and business litigation claims on behalf of technology companies, design professionals, property owners, product manufacturers, attorneys, public entities, and various other types of business entities.
